Young Woman on Trial for the Third Time for Killing Caesar Young Talks

Freely to Evening World Reporter and Tells of Her Hopes.

For the first time since she was locked up in the Tombs on the charge of killing Caesar Young, Nan Patterson consented to talk directly to a representative of a newspaper. After the third jury which is to try her was selected last evening and the case was adjourned to Monday, Miss Patterson spoke freely to Miss Emmeline Pendennis, of The Evening World. She was impulsive, confidential and hopeful. She answered every question put to-her in a free and frank manner, and those answers give a very interesting sidelight on the woman who stands in the shadow of death.
